UNIVERSITY OF CENTRAL FLORIDA

Rosen College of Hospitality Management

Bachelor of Science in Senior Living Management

The Senior Living Management B.S. degree is an interdisciplinary program with the department of Health Management & Informatics in UCF's College of Community Innovation and Education and the School of Social Work in UCF's College of Health Professions and Sciences. Senior living management companies have expressed great interest in hiring individuals with combined skills in health management and hospitality services, thus the interdisciplinary nature of the degree.

This is the first degree program for senior living management in the state of Florida and in the United States, that factors in the hospitality management approach of exceptional customer service and the hedonic lifestyle. There is no patient care involved, just management of all aspects of a home or community.

This degree program will not require a medical or nursing degree. Its major components will focus on general education, hospitality core courses, healthcare-management core courses and the senior living lifestyle to encompass lodging, food and beverage, events and entertainment, plus some electives. The senior living management degree program focuses on developing business acumen and management skills for independent and assisted living housing, and continuous care communities, where hospitality services are important components.

Graduates with a Senior Living Management B.S. degree can expect a salary range of $40-$75 thousand in two-five years and may pursue professional career paths in the industry such as:

- Executive Director
- Assistant Director
- Operations Management
- Foodservice Director
- Activity and Event Director
