We Know Senior Living

The Senior Living Management Bachelor of Science degree is an interdisciplinary program that combines the art and science of Hospitality Management with Aging Studies and Health Care Management. The undergraduate degree program is designed to adapt the culture and philosophy of hospitality to the senior living industry, meeting a call from industry leaders that understand that a culture of hospitality presents a strategic advantage for senior living communities by enhancing the overall experience of the residents.

The objective of the program is to prepare its graduates for managerial positions in the senior living industry. This degree program does not require a medical or nursing degree. There is no patient care involved, just management of all aspects of a home or community. The major components focus on courses in hospitality management, healthcare management, and gerontology.

The First Degree Program of its Kind

The Senior Living Management program is the first degree to combine exceptional hospitality customer service with an emphasis on healthful living for seniors.

This is an interdisciplinary degree program with the Department of Health Management and Informatics in the College of Community Innovation and Education and Aging Studies. This degree program relates to the medical field of serving the active senior population.

Today's elderly population wants and expects more from life than their parents before them. They want to travel, experience new things, lead an active life, and enjoy a lifestyle they have worked hard to achieve. The senior housing industry will need to train and recruit more than 1.2 million new employees by 2025. Students who succeed in this degree program will graduate with a variety of skills that will create meaningful service experiences in senior living and continuous care communities.
